Dress the Troll

DRESS LADY GWENI

A special pair of shoes turn Gweni into...

The Dancing Lady!

ady Gweni was feeling very excited, for she had been invitedto the Royal Ball.

"The trouble is, I'm not much of a dancer," she confided in her friend, Merlin Junior, a sorcerer's apprentice. "I don't know the difference between the Cha-Cha and the Foxtrot!"

"Don't worry, dear Lady," sighed Merlin Junior, who had rather a soft spot for Gweni, "my master is away for the day but I'm sure I can weave a simple spell that will have you dancing until the cows come home!"

With that, Merlin Junior whisked himself away to the Royal science lab and with a "Zip! Zap! Alla-kazam!" he soon returned with a pair of sparkling red dancing shoes.

"Wear these shoes and you will be the best dancer at the ball," he informed Gweni. "But remember, don't put them on until the ball is about to start!" Well, of course, being the rather impatient type, Gweni could not wait until the ball to try on the shoes.

"I'm sure there'll be no harm in wearing them now," she thought as she slipped the shoes on her feet. "Ooooh! They are comfortable! I feel as if I could dance right now!"

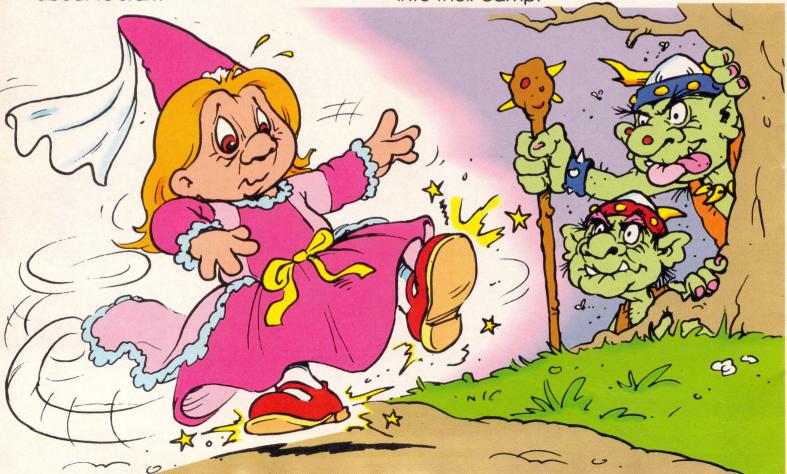

Suddenly, her feet did begin to dance. They danced to the left and then to the right. Then they waltzed her around the royal bedroom, down the stairs and out into the courtyard.

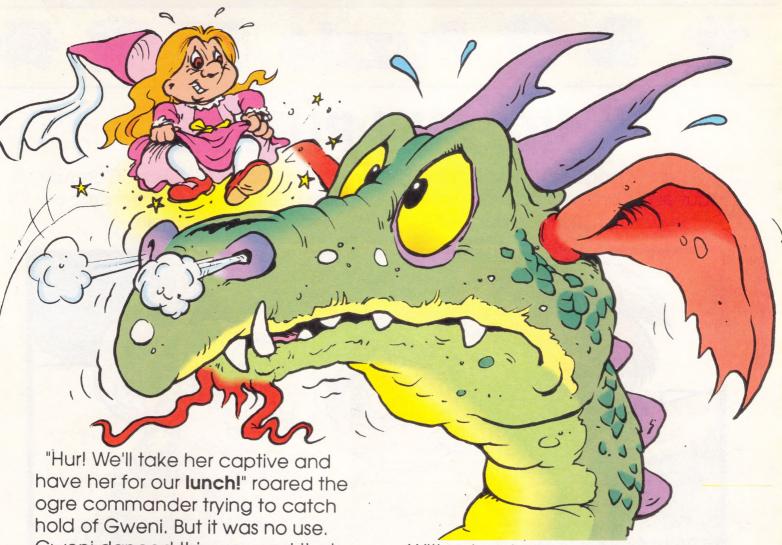

"Help!" cried Gweni, as she disco'd down the lane, "I can't stop dancing!"

No matter how hard she tried, she couldn't pull her feet free from the shoes.

She danced over hill and dale and back again!

An army of ogres who had decided to attack the troll castle and were quite amused to see Gweni dancing into their camp.

Gweni danced this way and that and the ogres all crashed into each other as they leapt to grab her.

"Help! We surrender!" cried the commander as poor Gweni suddenly found herself dancing on his head and giving him a terrible headache. "We'll never try and raid your castle again!"

But Gweni had already danced away towards the mountains where the hideous dragon lived!

"Who comes tap-tap-tapping at my door?" roared the dragon, poking its head out of its cave to fry the intruder with its hot, garlic breath.

"It's me!" squealed a very frightened Gweni, "and I'm not tapping, I'm tap dancing!" and Gweni found herself tap-dancing on it's snout!

"Ouch! Ouch!" cried the dragon. "I can't live here with trolls that dance on my nose all day! I shall have to flee from this place forever."

With a beat of its giant wings the dragon flew away never to be seen again.

Luckily Gweni managed to dance her way back to the castle where she burst into Merlin Junior's room

"Oh dear!" sighed Merlin Junior as Gweni danced pirouettes around him, "I did warn you not to put those shoes on until the ball!"

With a wave of his wand Merlin Junior stopped the shoes from dancing. Gweni was very relieved.

"You'd better get changed now," he told her, "it's nearly time for the ball."

Gweni groaned, "I've had enough of dancing for one day," she sighed, flopping into an armchair, "I shall attend the next ball - after I've learnt to dance properly! I'm going to stay home tonight and have a nice hot foot bath!"

And that's exactly what she did!
